

Dennis Corporation contributes to the University of South Carolina's ASCE Chapter (August 29, 2007)

Dan Dennis, President of Dennis Corporation, recently spoke at the University of South Carolina's American Society of Civil Engineers Chapter meeting. A full service engineering firm located in Columbia, SC, Dennis Corporation has been a long time contributor to endeavors supporting the education of future engineers.

In his August 29th presentation, Mr. Dennis outlined Dennis Corporation's services, its divisions and gave insight into the inner workings of a civil engineering firm. During his presentation, Mr. Dennis gave a PowerPoint presentation highlighting examples from Dennis Corporation's previous and current projects. He also illustrated real world scenarios engineers face when marketing their services.

Jared Easterlin, President of the American Society of Civil Engineers, stated that "the presentation allowed students to see the side of engineering that they cannot learn in the textbooks. Hearing Mr. Dennis explain how an engineering firm works, showed us how the many divisions of the company work together toward the goal of completing each project. Our members were also able to see the many avenues available to students who earn an engineering degree. Overall, we thoroughly enjoyed having Mr. Dennis speak at our meeting, and we sincerely thank him for his support of the ASCE Student Chapter at USC."
